

PASSION LED US HERE

April 2022

Today, I am excited to unveil our new website. You may have noticed our previous website desperately needed some TLC, so over the past year, our team has been hard at work to build the site I'm so thrilled to share with you today. Our commitment to the horses and community has always been a lynchpin of our work, and it has remained that way throughout this entire process. We built this site with you in mind every step of the way. This site is for you—our community. We hope you find our new look as exciting as we do, and that the ease of finding the information you need to make a difference inspires you to join us in our fight to end equine cruelty.

Over the course of the 18 years I have worked at Days End Farm Horse Rescue, I have witnessed just how strong the community is when we come together to lend a hand, do good, and help horses heal. I have witnessed horses suffer the ultimate sacrifice in situations that could have been prevented. On those same days, I have witnessed a barn full of people fighting to save those horses' lives. These experiences have confirmed my belief in the inherent good of others. Where there is neglect and abuse, there is always kindness.

As you take some time to browse through our new site, remember this: Days End Farm Horse Rescue has been built on selfless acts from community members. In our 34-year history, we have witnessed time and time again what is possible when fervent people come together to demand change. Passionate individuals working together are the most formidable, because we know no limits to our work—the impossible is always possible. Together, we will end equine cruelty. Will you join us?

For the horses,

Eric Clemm Ochoa
